WELCOME TO THE CITY OF SPRING VALLEY

The following is information on what is available in the City of Spring Valley, important telephone numbers, City ordinances, the history of Spring Valley and much more:

POPULATION: 2452 (as of 2022 census)

Spring Valley was named for the numerous springs found in the area by settlers. In 1852 the first white people visited the area, with the local Native-Americans having largely left the vicinity. By 1853 Native-American title to the land was extinguished and immigration came in a wave. Simeon Phillips settled one mile east of the present city and built the first structure in the township in 1852. A few others staked claims and moved on. In 1853 many others arrived, including T.F. Huntley who claimed land where the city is now. The first year his family lived in a shelter made of hay, later building a log hut which was the first building on the town site.

In 1855 Fillmore County was created. That year a group of five men from Philadelphia came to the area and formed the Spring Valley Association. They bought 180 acres of land at the present townsite for $200 in gold and platted the town of Spring Valley. The next day they returned to Iowa to get their families and returned later that year.

The next two years were active as many more settlers arrived. From the beginning, Spring Valley was a town whose business served the surrounding population of farming families. I.N. Cummings opened the first store with $300 worth of goods displayed from under his bed. By 1856 he put up the best building in town and opened the first business. In 1856 a second store opened and the first hotel opened in a hewn log structure in 1855, later moving to a frame structure in 1857. A lawyer and blacksmith soon arrived.

In May 1858, the municipality of Spring Valley had its first election and in 1872 village government was officially authorized by the legislature.

Spring Valley industry has always tended to focus on agricultural products. The Southern Minnesota Railroad was finished through town in 1875, after much effort and expense by a few citizens, and thus insured the town's future. (A look at Forestville, which had several hundred inhabitants at this time, shows what happened to a nearby town that the railroad bypassed: it died out completely in a few years.) The railroad helped agriculture move its products. By 1882 there were five grain elevators, wheat was the major crop--Fillmore County being second in the state in wheat production in 1879. Later, as the soil wore out and wheat yields dropped, diversified farming consisting of corn, livestock and dairy production took over. In 1890 another railroad came through; of course none remain in operation today, trucks having totally replaced this mode of transportation.

LOCATION: Spring Valley is located on the western edge of Fillmore County. The county is bordered on the east by Houston County, on the north by Olmsted and Winona Counties and on the west by Mower County. The southern border is shared with the State of Iowa. The larger cities nearby which provide employment opportunities and shopping competition for Spring Valley are Rochester 25 miles to the north, Austin 30 miles to the west, and Decorah, Iowa, 45 miles to the southeast.

TOPOGRAPHY: The area around Spring Valley is excellent to moderately productive for farming. The city is located on the eastern edge of the area covered by the last glaciers, so it benefits from level to gently rolling topography. The glaciers also left thick deposits of rich glacial drift, or soil. Land a little further to the east, including most of the rest of Fillmore County, was not covered by glaciers and it remains steeply sloped and dissected by many streams, with only a thin layer of topsoil. Also, around Spring Valley are some deeply cut river valleys and rocky bluffs. The entire county is lakeless, but it seems to make up for the loss with numerous streams and rivers. Spring Valley Creek runs through the south part of the city and eventually joins the Root River downstream.

GEOLOGY: Underneath the soil is limestone bedrock fractured with many cracks, caves and fissures. This type of geology is called karst, and it underlies a large part of southeast Minnesota. Karst allows surface water to enter the ground and mix freely with groundwater. If surface water is polluted by agricultural runoff, feedlots, or improperly buried waste, it will pollute the groundwater, which is depended upon for drinking water supplies.

AGRICULTURE: Spring Valley is located in a prime farming region in Minnesota and agriculture has always been the economic mainstay of the area. Today the predominant crops grown are corn and soybeans. Livestock operations consisting of dairy, beef and hog farms are prevalent. Farm implement businesses and trucking industries remain strong in Spring Valley today.

“Value-added processing” is a potential opportunity which could help Spring Valley develop economically, as well as strengthen the farm economy of the area. Value-added processing means that ag products can be processed, at least partially, in the area where they are produced. In contrast, most ag products today are shipped out of the Spring Valley area: grain is exported or shipped to feedlots in the west; cattle and hogs are sent to Austin for processing; soybeans are shipped elsewhere for processing into a multitude of convenience foods. Ideas being explored elsewhere in Minnesota include making alcohol from corn and producing gasohol, making methane energy from animal wastes, processing corn for oil and syrup and growing more fruits and vegetables for direct marketing to the Rochester and Twin Cities areas.

WATER: Spring Valley, like the rest of southeast Minnesota, sits over the largest aquifer of pure water in the state. While the quality of these water supplies is being threatened, the water resource remains a valuable feature that can be used to attract industry. Much of the U.S., west and south, where business has flocked in recent years, is finding that water shortages are curtailing their growth. Some have predicted that water will be the energy crisis of the next decade. To the extent that Spring Valley can help maintain clean supplies of groundwater, it may be able to attract industries, particularly in the food processing area.

TOURISM: Spring Valley sits in the heart of an area with many amenities, and it seems that tourism is frequently overlooked as a possible growth industry for Southeastern Minnesota. Nearby resources include two state parks, Forestville and Lake Louise, each with extensive camping, trails for snowmobiles, cross country skiing, horses and hiking. Lake Louise has the only swimming lake in the area. Forestville boasts of famous trout fishing and the historical town site including the 1905 Meighen store. Mystery Cave is an impressive, well-run attraction and much can be learned about our unique karst geology from a visit there. Spring Valley is located on Highway 16, which follows the beautiful Root River in from the Mississippi. This scenic drive could be promoted as an alternative to Interstate 90 for tourists. The entire area can be promoted for its scenery, trout fishing, hunting, etc. Spring Valley itself already has a public swimming pool, several parks, a dump station run by the DNR, a disc golf course, a town historical museum, an 1878 Methodist church with its unique stained-glass windows and a Laura Ingalls Wilder connection.
